The background is a stylized, cartoonish illustration of a university campus. In the center is a large, multi-story building made of reddish-brown bricks. It has a central entrance with a dark doorway and several arched windows on the ground floor. On the roof of the building, three flags are flying on tall poles. The flags are the Australian national flag, the Aboriginal flag, and the Torres Strait Islander flag. The building is flanked by large, leafy green trees. The sky is a clear blue with a few white, fluffy clouds. A paved path leads from the bottom center towards the building's entrance. The overall style is bright and positive.

Writing an Editor's Note

Start

Editor's Note

An "Editor's Note" is a short paragraph at the end of a media release.

It gives journalists and readers important background information about your organisation.

It usually consists of the following:

- Full Company Name: The official name of the organisation.
- History & Location: When did it start? Where is it based?
- Main Activities: What does the company do, sell, or provide?
- Mission or Goal: What is the company's main purpose?

After you have done the above activity, check your understanding by taking this short quiz:

In the example above, the phrase "for a while" is too vague. A better phrase would be:

since over a hundred years ago

for many years

✓ since 1909

Correct! Using a specific date like "since 1909" is clear and professional. It gives the reader an exact fact.

After you have done the above activity, check your understanding by taking this short quiz:

In the example, the phrase "does lots of different things" is too vague and informal. A better phrase would be:

specialises in teaching and research

does a bunch of academic stuff

✗ is involved in various areas

Not quite. This is a little better, but it is still not specific. The reader does not know what UQ does.

Write an Editor's Note

Write a short, professional "Editor's Note" paragraph about UQ (about 2-3 sentences).

1. Combine all the key facts from the table into a smooth, flowing paragraph.
2. You can change the order of the information to see what sounds best.
3. You may need to add small words (like 'and', 'since', 'based in', 'it is') to connect the ideas and form complete sentences.

There is more than one correct way to write this paragraph. After you have written your Editor's Note, look at the model answers to see how the same information can be arranged in different ways.

Writing an Email Subject Line

NotABot

Hello! I'm here to help you practise writing effective email subject lines. Here's your scenario: you need to email your team about a meeting this Friday at 2pm to discuss the project timeline. Write the subject line.

STUDENT

About the meeting

NotABot

Thanks for having a go! You've told your reader this is about a meeting. Now picture their inbox: forty unread emails on a Friday morning. What would they still need to know before deciding to open yours?

STUDENT

idk just tell me the answer

NotABot

I understand you'd like the answer quickly, but I'm here to help you work it out, and you're closer than you think. A strong subject line usually names the purpose, the topic and the time. Your draft has the topic. Which two are missing?

STUDENT

Reminder: we are having a meeting to discuss the project timeline this Friday at 2pm

NotABot

Much better! Purpose, topic and time are all there now. One last push: a subject line isn't a sentence. Yours runs to 15 words, and the strongest sit between six and ten. What can you cut without losing any meaning?

STUDENT

Reminder: project timeline meeting, Friday 2pm

NotABot

That's a professionally sound subject line: purpose, topic and time in six words. There's nothing I'd change. Would you like a trickier scenario, or end here?
